

Natkrit Kongphichphan

Assumption Samutprakarn School

Age: 15 years old.

Have you ever walked down the streets and randomly felt the uncontrollable urge to buy or have something, as if you had absolute certainty that this very thing is good for me? Even without knowing the reason why.

I was a hedonistic person, a lazy carefree show-off, a person who just wants to have fun not understanding the consequences. I was forever a sarcastic person that would hurt people around me more than help, the useless anti-social boy who could not work with others who eventually got in trouble. The head teacher of the school pulled me out my class and brought me down to her office, at first she looked disappointed and my sarcastic manner drove her to lose her temper.

During this moment, the voice that was angrily shouting at me slowly faded away, at that very moment was I able to see two mysterious figures. One of them, frozen in ice. A relic of the past frozen in time, the other figure, amorphous, fluctuating back and forth. I started to realise that something very important was about to happen, it was like everything was planned. Time stood still at that moment, when the two figures started talking to me, both telling me about the two roads between which I must choose to walk down. I and the amorphous figure started to walk towards each other, then the figures started to coalesce, the amorphous figure became solid but before I could get a glimpse of his face I snapped back into the room. That inevitable truth has caused a scar in my brain, an event that could never be forgotten, a risk I must take and mystery surrounded by clouds that have caused permanent unrest inside myself.

The boy I was is no longer here, the smart arrogant person who didn't really care much about what's happening around him has transformed into the person I am today. The very person that I am today is just a better incarnation of myself, the epiphany that changed my life, was a message from me to the boy to change. A presence, planting a seed in my consciousness, that will grow into the person that I am today. My mind was like an unenlightened, fertile space that had the potential to grow and flourish. As a sentient being now I am acutely aware that I am the creator of my own destiny. I now know that the amorphous figure was a manifestation of present self.

In fact, we human beings are like time. Since the very beginning of creations time has moved forward and never backwards. Time is a human construct with this ideology in mind, it is easy to see that we mimic our own creation. As we are made of the universe, we reflect its nature, forever changing, always evolving, moving forward, to the objectives we must achieve.

Existence is the moment before time freezes and when it is frozen, it is what we call the past. The past acts like a solid, a memory frozen and unchangeable by anything, the present acts very much like a liquid, we are able to make our decisions, and the form it takes varies due to our choice, the future is like a gas, amorphous; it can change freely according to our will. Our entropic selves are very selfish, they want us to become them, but our futures have no definite shape that is why it is like a gas it can change to anything according to our decisions. As we move forward, our future selves are slowly nurturing us until we become them, and they are selfishly telling us to do so.

I have felt either the feeling of wanting something or wanting to learn something, there was no explanation why I felt that way it was completely random. It was as if someone or something has told me that doing that specific thing will benefit me in one way or another, and it wasn't once or twice I felt this way, numerous amount of times where I have wanted to do something out of the blue. I am not talking about Déjà vu I am talking about that random and strong feeling of obtaining something.

As human beings, we have the power to change and that is what really differentiates us from other organisms. Time the universe and us humans are linked together, we all move forward and never back, it is truly a mystery how our brains work it is really fascinating. We do not change ourselves but instead, we merge with our older self as we slowly evolve to become our potential selves. We as humans work hard to obtain perfection. We have the power to change the future, while our prospective selves are being the catalyst for us to improve.